In one cave which was cleaned out, 17 tons of guano was collected five months subsequently, all of which was deposited by the bats in that time. It has been estimated that 1,696 tons of guano will be the annual deposit.

"The habits of the bats are vastly interesting. By day they are all to be seen in the caves hanging from the roof one dependent from the other, sometimes in a string of 10 or 15 deep. Sometimes the uppermost bat loosens his grasp, perhaps he becomes tired from the weight of those depending from him. The whole string will drop several feet, but will neverfall to the floor of the caves. They hitch on to another string and remain there.
